

Dr. David Kim, Dr. Dave graduated from Rutgers University majoring in Biology. He received his medical degree from Robert Wood Johnson Medical School, NJ. He went on to specialize in Physical Medicine and Rehab at Thomas Jefferson University in Philadelphia PA. He subsequently further specialized in Pain Management and he also did a fellowship in Integrative/Alternative Medicine at the University of Arizona.

He studied Trigger Point Needling with the inventor of the treatment, Dr. Chan Gunn, MD in Vancouver, Canada which is the cornerstone of his treatment approach today. He also continued to study both traditional and alternative medical treatments for his patients. Because of his varied and broad knowledge and experience, Dr. Dave is able to treat chronic pain patients without medications by using the body's own healing mechanisms based upon biological principals.

He has also been active in the medical community and was the former president of the NJ Society of Physical Medicine and Rehab. During his term, he was focused on not only improving the education of his fellow colleagues, but also to advocate for patients in the political arena.

Dr. Dave has varied interests outside of medicine. He was a music minor in college who continues to enjoy composing and performing music, and he is an avid collector of vintage musical instruments. He is also a motorcycle enthusiast and enjoys riding whenever he has the time.
